

A glimpse of the dead

This macabre decapitated doll head panicked every child that laid eyes on it from the minute it mysteriously appeared in this hole on the wall.

Rumor has it it belonged to an old woman that couldn't have children. She used to leave a wooden basket full of dusty toys in her front yard, hoping for some guests to take them, since she knew they would enjoy her gesture, and she would be happy to watch them play in exchange. But things didn't go as planned. She waited for years, and no one dared to approach her basket. One day, full of anger and disappointed in herself, she burnt her house down, digging her own grave. That was the last time anyone heard from her.

More than ten years went by until this house was demolished, and it was then that the gross mystery came to light. When the walls were knocked down, several doll heads were discovered inside the walls, one of them looking strangely realistic. It turned out to be made with human hair and children's teeth. The forensic evidence proved that this woman did have a child in the end.
